We should know that there have been people predicting this recession for decades who can inform us of what to expect and do about it now. They weren't guessing, they were looking closer at the global financial system than most, learned who controls it and how, then figured out what they were doing.

We have access to their work to share with others to prepare us for the "double-dip" effect, or really the fact that we never "dipped" up and out of the recession. In this "global" system, we're entering into a "global depression" as even the mass media admits. Governments aren't trying to stop it either.

We don't have to accept being told that we're broke. Not with the modern technology we have to raise living standards worldwide instead of lower them. Not in Canada, the second largest country in the world full of resources with just 30 million people in it. Accepting anything but getting more is ridiculous.

We need to understand why Toronto needs to locally resist the "global" consensus on how bad things are financially while we can. Once the public narrative is established, we'll be taught to feel "smart" for explaining how screwed we all are. Below are websites and films to learn more to protect your wealth.

Good Movies To Watch To Learn The History Of Money And Who "Makes" It

Money As Debt

A short animated Canadian film about how money is created by banks when we agree to borrow it and pay it back later. If we borrow $20,000, they create it on their balance sheets and start spending it. (45 mins)

America: Freedom to Fascism

The later producer of "The Rose" with Bette Midler and "Trading Places" with Eddie Murphy has made a very entertaining film about central banking, taxes and many other issues that affect all of us. (110 mins)

The Money Masters

While it's long, it's also fascinating to see the history of money and how it's worked in different cultures, plus who controls it today. Since we're in a recession, this can help us figure out what to do. (215 mins)
